INTO THE RELATIONSHIP OF EXTERNAL REALITY AND THE HUMAN BRAIN

The point of departure for this manuscript is the classical book of the same title by Gordon Allport. As excited as I was when I first read the book, I now feel that it was too limited in scope. Allport, immersed in his own culture, was taking for granted a particular assumption, which forms the basis of my book: that the nature of prejudice solely concerns the prejudice of humans towards other humans. The key concepts of Allport's work are summarized, & shown to represent a form of "horizontal" prejudice. It is proposed that a more fundamental form of prejudice is "vertical" or hierarchical, & relates to an overlay or projection by the human brain upon all of external reality. A nontechnical discussion of biological evolution is integrated into the philosophical & sociological text to present the human brain & its behavior as a product of biological evolution. Thus, the reader is made aware of the existence of vertical prejudice & will be able to understand its origins. Order from Barry Zeeburg, 4378 N.
