The topic of this book is one of the most important problems the world is facing - the problem of global income distribution which has remained more or less static since 1948. The contributors review world development over the forty-odd years since the end of World War II, and attempt to draw lessons for the future from the experiences of these years. After an Introduction, which provides empirical material on aspects of global development as well as issues related to domestic development processes in Third World countries, the chapters fall into three sections. The first section studies the problem at the global level. Then the experience of the newly industrialized countries (which are regarded as having been fairly successful) is analysed. The final section looks at the case of some of the least developed countries, sometimes called the 'Fourth World', for whom the post-War experience has been considerably less positive. The contributions to this book represent the views of experts from a wide range of countries, and will promote a better understanding of the long-term nature of development problems. This should lead to a more effective policy of development cooperation among the nations of the world.
